I'm building a website with Drupal 7 and I'm using Panels and Views. We're planning to display about 1000 products, which would be loaded in a grid on the first load of the page. So I'm wondering what is the best approach? Ajax? OR Load the entire page first, reload with Ajax for every product? A: There is no "best" way. It is matter of preference. When you are loading more than 1000 products, there is small probability that you will get a timeout on the server. In this case Ajax would be beneficial. AJAX is faster than reloading the entire page and it would be better to load at least last 50 (optionally 100) products before pagination (Show/Hide products in panels depending on a user choice). In case of a timeout with Ajax, you probably would have an error message and would display it before reloading the page. In case of reloading, you would have everything lost. [Nuclear distribution of 5'-nucleotidase in rat brain cells]. The distribution of nucleoside triphosphatase (nucleotidase) hydrolyzing nucleoside monophosphates has been studied in subcellular fractions of rat brain cortex by histochemical and immunochemical methods. The enzyme was found in all parts of neurons, glia and vessels. It was accumulated in growth cones. No specific properties of nucleotidase have been revealed in nuclei, microsomes, endoplasmic reticulum and mitochondria. In nuclei, the enzyme was found mainly in the granular component.# coding=utf-8 # Copyright 2020 The Google Research Authors. # # Licensed under the Apache License, Version 2.0 (the "License"); # you may not

We present two cases of persistent brachial artery injury after high-energy trauma, in which an aneurysmal dilation of the vessel occurred, requiring surgical intervention. A technique of arterial decompression by the use of a balloon arterial catheter was used in both cases. The balloon was inflated via an end-hole in the catheter, inserted from the brachial artery via a longitudinal incision of the radial artery, to secure a decompressive arterial pressure gradient and control pulsatile bleeding.What if we told you that nature just so happens to be full of tiny creatures, each uniquely suited for protecting the butterflies that make their way through life on a daily basis? Stories about the Butterfly Gardener — an Australian butterfly species that mates while laying eggs on a piece of grassland — are inherently more intriguing and interesting than those involving other types of butterflies. After all, a butterfly that chooses to lay its eggs in an ant-infested environment is no butterfly at all. But rather than look at the Butterfly Gardener as an indestructible species that is too determined to conquer its difficult environment, its natural beauty can be celebrated in its style of self-preservation. As I roamed about the Australian Butterfly Gardens in Kings Park, I couldn't help but marvel at the structure of its habitat, one that was continually dotted with thorny branches and various heavy grasses that blocked the way of so many caterpillars and butterflies. In order to survive and procreate, the butterfly must avoid and protect themselves from threats — a large part of its body is dedicated to that cause. The Butterfly Gardener's battle against threats and dangers has led to the evolution of its wingspan and length of its chrysalis,
