GyroSphere Trials is a fast-paced multiplayer game in which two to four players have to break records on a challenging course with five track areas and a variety of obstacles and hazards. In each track, players can choose different modes and each arena has their own unique type of gameplay. Games take place over multiple rounds and the player with the lowest number of lives left is eliminated. Track Types: Futuristic – In the futuristic track, a player moves the GyroSphere around the track by slowly moving it in one direction. At the end of the track, the player must quickly move the sphere back in the other direction to advance to the next track. In contrast to the original GyroSphere, the futuristic track is unidirectional. Racing – The racing track is similar to the futuristic track. A player can only move the GyroSphere in the same direction during a lap. In this mode, the GyroSphere can move faster and is more maneuverable. Rush – The rush track is a race with multiple opponents. The player must try to beat the other opponents and avoid being hit. Flying – In the flying track, players first move the GyroSphere around by following the arrows. Once the player has gotten familiar with the environment and controls, they can use the GyroSphere to fly through the air and reach the goal by pulling the sphere to them. The game has about 15 different characters with unique abilities. Levels with multiple tracks and different modes can be unlocked as the player advances. Gamers are rewarded with in-game credits for destroying obstacles and completing level challenges.

1 Player Career The single player career mode is where the gamers will test their skills in a multi-level career mode. Players can choose from 3 characters in 3 separate categories (Regular, Elite, and Master). The single player career mode is where the gamers

1. [url= Find out more about the DLC on the main website.[/url] 2. Once purchased, this DLC will download automatically in the DLC menu of Steam 3. Once downloaded, log into the Steam client and verify you downloaded the DLC 4. Log in as your Steam account and download the Steam client to your computer 5. Find the DLC menu in the Steam client, and click the "More" icon to launch the DLC 6. You should now find the DLC in the list, in the same way you would an Expansion 7. Find the DLC that corresponds with the DLC you bought in this list, and click it 8. This will open the DLC and show the information of the items from the DLC 9. Note down the characters' training rank and master-ninjutsu for each character. 10. For each Master-Ninjutsu related to a character's training rank, copy the Master-Ninjutsu 11. Once you've done this for all characters, you can continue to progress through the DLCs EX. If you have purchased Kakashi Hatake (Double Sharingan), Neji Hyuga (Sharingan), Shisui Uchiha (Sharingan), 12. Click them in order of ranking, and follow the above instructions for each master. EX. The character that you click will open up, and you can go to their specific master-ninjutsu information 13. Click it, copy the information, and then open up the DLC of the next character. 14. Repeat the process for each character. 15. When you've finished copying each Master-Ninjutsu for each character, save the sheet, and you can go on and continue. Important Notes: - Be careful not to purchase the DLC you are already owning. We do not want to give a advantage to a player who already has the DLC. - Please be aware that the characters may be called by a different name. If this happens, please don't panic or ask in Discord / Forum, etc because it means the character is not yet implemented in the game. You can watch the walkthrough video at the following location. What's new:

designer Lizard's rating The glowheads in this file come in three sizes. Lizard learned them from a fellow Xerophile that was preparing his adult glowhead and while Lizard wasn't the most patient person he was certainly patient. So far Lizard has heard of a few guys in the US that have sent these over to the seller and luckily he found a UK seller who got some ordered from China. They are very simple. They have two electrical insulators that hold the glow filament, one for heat and the other for light. The length between the two is 22mm if I didn't remove the plastic skirt that comes down over the end. Both glowfilaments come out of one side of the head. To test them, Lizard took out the plastic skirt and added two more glowheads to the mix. The light between the two brighter glowheads was almost as bright as the head itself. In a few years maybe Lizards will be building some glowheads that are 18mm long to see how long before a longer filament will crack. It'll save money, time, effort and die rubbing or other issues between the two. Other than that each glowhead comes in a sturdy plastic container with the base sealed. The whole assembly is 30g and the stupid glitter looks nice in the transparent container. Lizard assembled the Chinese glowheads in his box and end of the circuit and was trying to figure out how to get this coded. He suspects these are originally part of an arc neon. He stripped the end cap out and found the end of the fluorosis. Although this makes him happy, the parts are so cheap he'll be replacing them before this wears out much. Also, Lizard designed a new circuit with some suggestions coming from experts in the geek group. The new design seems to have more illumination with far less power. Based on a few things LM added into the design there seems to be a major issue with the filament shorts. The primary concern, the post that is supposed to light up the filament. Not being EE but having a physics background, Lizard was pretty confused about why so much heat ended up in the post. Lizard suspect there is a vapor locking issue that happens at high heats but the only thing that seemed to have any measurable change in temperature that leads to checking this phenomena is the DSO. Lizard does not believe this will be an issue with the newer foundry products. If this isn't resolved in the
